Other workshops

Economic Development and Tourism conducts a number of seminars and workshops in association with industry, to help develop the Tasmanian export sector.

The workshops range in topics from introduction to exporting, risk management, export documentation, banking and international law, insurance and selling, to focusing on exports for a specific industry or country.

They feature a range of presenters including export advisers, trade commissioners, Australian Institute of Export, KPMG and the Australian Maritime College.

Economic Development and Tourism promotes its workshops and seminars in its ExportActive newsletter, so please refer to it for details of future events.

For more exporting information or to arrange access to the ExportActive newsletter, please visit the export and market development pages on Economic Development and Tourism website at:

There is a self assessment form called “Are you ready to export” that you are asked to complete prior to attendance.

This is a series of questions to determine your level of export readiness and capability. The answers do not need to be lengthy (some will be a simple yes or no response) and are intended to encourage thought and discussion within your company about exporting.

This self assessment will allow you to familiarise yourself with issues relating to exporting before attending the workshop.

If at the end of the workshop you believe exporting is a desired strategy for the growth of your business, then we can work with you to help you to achieve your business goals.

The workshop is presented by Martin Turmine, Export Adviser with the Department of Economic Development and Tourism. Martin has over 16 years experience in international marketing and exporting in roles as Product Manager and Area Sales Manager. His formal qualifications include an Associate Diploma of Electrical Engineering and Diploma of Export Management.

If you are interested in knowing more about what is involved in exporting, please contact Martin Turmine on 03 6233 5795 or email Martin.Turmine@development.tas.gov.au
